RE: Hulu documentary on past abuse involving members of Scouting

You may have seen or heard about recent advertisements promoting a documentary about the Boy Scouts of America (BSA) to be released by streaming service provider Hulu. The documentary covers a range of complex topics, including youth protection, the national organization's financial restructuring case, changes in membership policies over recent years, and the future of Scouting.

While there are aspects of the film "Leave No Trace" that mischaracterize the BSA's policies and actions, rather than challenge these inaccuracies, our focus is on supporting survivors. The BSA welcomes any opportunity for survivors to share their stories as part of the healing process, and we applaud the bravery and resilience of all survivors of past abuse in Scouting.

Please know that our council's focus remains on the safety and future of Scouting.

Thank you for all you do to make the BSA our nation's foremost program of character-building and values-based leadership training.
